What Do These Blue-Chip Venture Capitalists Have In Common?

What Do These Blue-Chip Venture Capitalists Have In Common?

- A. They believe that venture capital needs a strong, consolidated voice on Capitol Hill.
- B. They understand the importance of comprehensive, credible industry research and information—and know how to use it.
- C. They know venture capital is a people business, and relish the rare opportunities to network with other industry stakeholders.
- D. All of the above

That's why each of them belongs to the venture capital's blue-chip organization: The National Venture Capital Association. NVCA provides venture capitalists with the advocacy, research, education and networking opportunities that the market requires. Large or small, our member firms receive all of the above and more.

So, what do you have in common with these blue-chip venture capitalists? If you're already an NVCA member, or are interested in becoming one, then the answer is simple: common sense.

To join or renew your membership contact Janice Mawson at 703.524.2549 (ext.18) or jmawson@nvca.org. And come inside.

Advocacy. Research. Education. Networking.
Come Inside.
